"We're coming along fine. He's started to talk."

"Take a tranquilizer and call me in the morning."

"I can tell you one thing right off—you can't solve your problems by running away."

"Perhaps you just imagine they're whistling at you."
"And how long have you had this feeling that you’re a psychoanalyst?"

"There’s nothing wrong with you. It’s all in your body."

"Try not to think of me as a woman."

"If nothing else, this rest is doing me good."
"People misunderstand me. For instance, I just came here to repair your phone."

"He claims something keeps following him, Doctor."

"I keep having this recurrent nightmare that my telephone is out of order."
"... Now, as I've said before, a neurosis often has its basis in conflicts within the family group."

"Pleasant dreams, Darling—which I shall analyze for you in the morning."

"My current period of depression started—I got your bill for the last one."

"—and the doctor says my claustrophobia's completely cured now."

"Ask yourself this: If, as you say, you are a total failure, how could you possibly afford me?"
"Now just say the first thing that comes into your mind."

"Ask yourself, pet: 'Why do I want a new hat?'"

"My husband ran away with your wife."

"Oh, not the Norman Vincent Peale."
"Now you can tell your psychiatrist we are doing things together."

"Now, a lit-tle more to the left, so your head is precisely facing magnetic north!"

"Self-assured'? Charlie boy, I'm so self-assured, I lie to my analyst."

"My difficulty with the split-personality patient is to get either one to pay me."
"Maybe it's not a complex at all. Maybe you actually are inferior."

"I love just one girl. She loves me. I have no intention of marrying others after we're married."

"You've got to do something about my sleepwalking, Doctor. My feet are killing me."
"As you know, Doctor, I'm a very busy man."

"Did you remember to get my tranquilizing pills?"

"You've done me a world of good, Doctor, but you know much."
